Andrew Martin, a1704466

March 8, 2018

Currently in his third year at the University of Adelaide, studying the fields of applied and statistical mathematics, Andrew Martin is a self-driven knowledge seeker. After his first year at university, Andrew self-started a team project, using coding algorithms to develop procedural structures and environments. In this venture, Andrew applies his problem solving skills, as generating seemingly natural terrains can be complex. In his second year he was recruited by the Centre for People Development, where his role is to design and produce interactive web pages to fit business specifications. Once completing his bachelor's degree, Andrew plans to further seek knowledge in further study, before pursuing his interests in mathematical systems modelling, and software development.
